During the period of 2009—2014, the School of Foreign Languages achieved a substantial rise in the number of published journal papers. Of the 157 papers published in reputable, 10 papers were referred by SSCI, 1 paper were referred by SCI, and 18 by A&HCI. Some papers won prizes, including a first prize of Shanghai Philosophy and Social Sciences and two third prizes of Municipal Philosophy and Social Sciences.

During that period of time, the School of Foreign Languages set up a Language Cognition Lab, a comprehensive base for the empirical research in Linguistics, Literature, and Translation. The School had reached an international cooperation agreement with the Translation and Cross-Cultural Studies Center, University of Manchester, UK and the Language Cognition Lab, University of Minnesota, USA. It collaborated with the Central Compilation and Translation Bureau in setting up the Research Center of Translation and Circulation of Marxism in China and the west. The center was classified as one of the specially funded research base of humanities, SJTU. The School set up the Research Institute of Corpus and Cross-Cultural Strategy by integrating research teams of Corpus Linguistics, Corpus-Based Translation Studies, Second Language Acquisition, Functional Linguistics, and British and American Literature. By combining the various resources, the center aims at promoting academic projects and encouraging academic publications. With its excellent achievements, the center hopes it can contribute to the advancement of the School of Foreign Languages, the state, municipal government, and the Chinese society.
